Masterpieces of French Cinema | Summer School course

Masterpieces of French Cinema Summer School course

Each day of the program is devoted to a different masterpiece of French cinema. The mornings will start with an interactive lecture on the different visual languages and conventions that film critics tend to associate with these traditions. We then hone in on a particular director, exploring his or her larger body of work, before introducing the necessary context for the afternoon's film. After the screening, we will discuss some of the technical aspects of the film (including camerawork, lighting, music, etc.) as well as broader themes and ideas. Throughout the course, we'll also be thinking about how foreign-language films are consumed by different audiences, and how the meaning of such films changes when they are screened in different contexts.

The course is designed to introduce participants to a range of French films that are artistic and left-of-centre, but which are also accessible and entertaining selections!

The course begins in the silent era, with Carl Theodor Dreyer's masterpiece The Passion of Joan of Arc (1928), an unforgettable film about the trial of Joan of Arc. We then turn to Jean Renoir's 1939 film The Rules of the Game (La Règle du Jeu), before studying Jacques Tati's 1953 comedy Mr. Hulot's Holiday (Les Vacances de Monsieur Hulot). In the final stages of the week, we explore Jean-Luc Godard's groundbreaking 1960 film Breathless (À bout de souffle), as a representative of French New Wave cinema, before turning to a more recent masterpiece, Xavier Beauvois's Of Gods and Men (2010).

Day 2

Locations: Hobart

Overview:

On the first day of the program, we begin at 9.30am with a lecture on the silent era, centered around Carl Theodor Dreyer’s masterpiece The Passion of Joan of Arc (1928), an unforgettable film about the trial of Joan of Arc. We also learn about the early developments of cinema in France, with brief screenings of silent shorts by Melies. We learn about the extraordinary technical difficulties involved in producing Dreyer’s film, and think through its artistic response to European civilization. The lecture also sets up the context of the film and explores various reception issues.

After a break for morning tea at 11am, we begin the film, which continues until lunch at roughly 12.30/1pm. After the lunch break, we enjoy a detailed group discussion about the film.

Accommodation:

Day 5

Locations: Hobart

Overview:

Today, we begin at 9.30am with a lecture on Jean-Luc Godard's groundbreaking 1960 film Breathless (À bout de souffle), as a representative of French New Wave cinema. The lecture situates this vibrant cinematic movement in post-war French society, and explores its many cinematic innovations. Together, we explore the complex relationship at the heart of this film, and consider its oscillation between sentimentalism and realism. We also look at what a number of film theorists have had to say about its use of perspective and focalisation.

After a break for morning tea at 11am, we begin the film, which continues until lunch at roughly 12.30/1pm. After the lunch break, we enjoy a detailed group discussion about the film.
