settled the regions we know today as Britain and France, as well as other parts of Western Europe. We will learn about the battles fought, the Roman army, the technology introduced, the political process and the way this period has shaped our lives and the world as we know it today.

We begin with a general introduction to the Roman Empire where participating students can get a better sense of this period of history and the dynamics of Ancient Rome. We will then look at the bloody invasions of Britain and Gaul led by Caesar and the kind of environment that Britons lived in during Roman occupation. Over our week together we will get sense of the importance of religion, and the issues it caused, what life was like for women, the complex politics of the time and the challenges different emperors faced in running these areas.

Questions we consider in the classroom

How did the Romans have such power? This classroom program considers and discusses the Roman occupation between the 1st century BC and the 4th century AD. To both Britain and Gaul, the Romans brought roads, bridges, education, and cities. Perhaps above all, they brought Pax Romana or Peace of Rome. It was the resulting freedom from pirates, roving bandits, and other invaders which allowed these areas to grow prosperous. During their occupation they built magnificent villas, aqueducts, amphitheatres, theatres, temples, and whole cities. The remains of these structures are visible today, 2,000 years later. We engage with this period and ask what impact the Romans have left on these areas and how things might be different if this period of history had been different.
